

Social Philosophy

PHIL 3704, NET

Spring, 2021

Course Description:

This course will examine what difference the fact that we are social beings makes to a number of important philosophical questions. Some of these questions include how we should understand the relationship between individuals and their society, whether there is an important difference between social justice and distributive justice, and whether certain injustices can only be perpetuated against members of social groups. In addition to exploring and refining your views regarding these questions, students will develop their broader set of skills in using philosophical analysis to address issues of social importance.
