

Buying a Hat in Rome: A Personal View, with Pictures of Certain Buildings

Don Reich, Ph.D.
Professor Emeritus of Political Science
Brooklyn College

A man is in Florence, Italy with a tour group. He sees an Italian hat on an acquaintance and desperately wants one just like it. He can't find one in Florence, and becomes depressed about it. He then finds that the same group will be touring Rome the next year, so he signs up for the trip determined to find the hat. The man, however, is diverted by extraordinary non-hat related scenes everywhere he turns and develops a profound love for Italian architecture.

Tuesday, November 18, 2008
12:30 — 2:00 P.M.
Maroney-Leddy Lounge
Student Center

Food and refreshments will be served

Sponsored by:

Italian Culture Club (ACA Member)
Italian American Student Union
Center for Italian American Studies