Katherine Fry, associate professor of media studies in the Department of Television and Radio at Brooklyn College, received her Ph.D. in communication and media studies from Temple University in 1994. Since then she has been teaching and publishing in the areas of media research and criticism; television news; media culture and technologies; and advertising and popular culture. Currently she is engaged in research that involves talking to audiences about how they define news. She is also working within the borough of Brooklyn, developing media literacy curricula and running media literacy workshops for children, youth, adults and families.
