Robot Law:

A Legal Theory for Autonomous Artificial Agents

Samir Chopra is associate professor in the Department of Philosophy. His academic interests lie in the philosophical foundations of artificial intelligence, the politics and ethics of technology, the legal theory of artificial agents, philosophy of law, and logical foundations of artificial intelligence. His recent publications include A Legal Theory for Autonomous Artificial Agents (University of Michigan Press, 2011), Decoding Liberation: The Promise of Free and Open Source Software (Routledge, 2007), and The India-Pakistan Air War of 1965 (Manohar, 2005).

James Grimmelmann is associate professor at New York Law School and a member of its Institute for Information Law and Policy. He received his J.D. from Yale Law School, where he was Editor-in-Chief of LawMeme and a member of the Yale Law Journal. Prior to law school, he received an A.B. in computer science from Harvard College and worked as a programmer for Microsoft. He has served as a law clerk to the Honorable Maryanne Trump Barry of the United States Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit. Grimmelmann writes about intellectual property, virtual worlds, search engines, online privacy, and other topics in computer and Internet law.

Frank Pasquale is associate professor at Seton Hall Law School. Professor Pasquale's prior experience includes practicing law as an attorney at Arnold & Porter LLP and serving as a fellow at the Institute for the Defense of Competition and Protection of Intellectual Property in Lima, Peru. Pasquale received his J.D. from Yale Law School, an M.Phil. from Oxford University, and his B.A. from Harvard University. Pasquale has focused his scholarship on enriching intellectual property and health law with insights from economics, philosophy, and social science. He also plans and participates in programs sponsored by the Gibbons Institute for Law, Science & Technology, and its Health Law & Policy Program. Professor Pasquale blogs at Concurring Opinions and Madisonian.net, and has guest-blogged at Jurisdynamics.
