The Wolfe Institute
The Ethyle R. Wolfe Institute for the Humanities, in collaboration with Kurz Chair of Constitutional Rights,
the Departments of Africana Studies, English, History, Philosophy, Political Science, Puerto Rican and Latino Studies, Secondary Education, Sociology, the American Studies Program, the Women's and Gender Studies Program, and the CUNY Haitian Studies Institute, presents

Mr. Trump versus The U.S. Constitution

Is the U.S. Constitution a strong enough guardrail to protect the republic from a Donald Trump presidency? One aim of the framers in writing the U.S. Constitution was to create a government that could control itself from abuses of power that would infringe on the people's individual liberty. Republican majority leader, Senator Mitch McConnell recently said, “[W]hat protects us in this country against big mistakes being made is the structure, the Constitution, the institutions, no matter how unusual a personality may be who gets elected to office.” Still, Trump critics on both the political left and right are alarmed by his statements about restrictions on a free press, and attacks on a member of the independent federal judiciary, not to mention his immigration proposals including mass deportation and a Muslim ban. Two political scientists assess the constitutional and political viability of Trump’s proposals.

Professor Scott Lemieux received his B.A. and M.A. from McGill University and his Ph.D. from the University of Washington. He teaches political science at the College of St. Rose in Albany, NY. His research interests include public law, constitutional law, comparative law and institutions, and American politics. He has written or co-written articles for Perspectives on Politics, Polity, Studies in Law, Politics and Society, Journal of Supreme Court History, the Maryland Law Review, and the American Journal of Comparative Law. He also contributes regularly to the Guardian, the American Prospect, The Week, and The New Republic. He co-founded and writes for Lawyers, Guns and Money, an award-winning (primarily) political blog.

Professor Anna Law is the Herbert Kurz Chair in Constitutional Rights at Brooklyn College. Her research investigates the interactions of law, legal institutions, and politics. She is the author of The Immigration Battle in American Courts, which looks at the role of the federal judiciary in U.S. immigration politics. She is a former Program Analyst at the bipartisan, blue-ribbon United States Commission on immigration reform and has shared her expertise with the U.S. Senate Judiciary Committee, the Department of Homeland Security, and the National Science Foundation.

Monday, October 31, 2016
12:45 to 2:15 p.m.
Bedford Lounge, 2nd Floor
Brooklyn College Student Center
Campus Road and East 27th Street

For information: alaw@brooklyn.cuny.edu Twitter: twitter.com/Wolfe_Institute