Disability Studies and American Culture

Rachel Adams is professor of English and comparative literature at Columbia University, where she is also the director of “The Future of Disability Studies” project. She specializes in 19th- and 20th-century American literature, theories of race, gender, and sexuality, medical humanities, and disability studies. Her most recent book is Continental Divides: Remapping the Cultures of North America (University of Chicago Press, 2009). She is also the author of Sideshow U.S.A.: Freaks and the American Cultural Imagination (University of Chicago Press, 2001). Her book, Aiming High Enough: A Memoir of Motherhood, Disability, and Discovery, will be published by Yale University Press in Fall 2013.
