This course will examine what difference the fact that we are social beings makes to a number of key issues in moral and political philosophy. Some of these issues include how we should understand the source of moral normativity, whether there is an important difference between social justice and distributive justice, and whether certain injustices can only be perpetuated against members of social groups.

For more information, please contact Professor Lindauer at Matthew.Lindauer@brooklyn.cuny.edu.