Welcome to the 2018-2022 Strategic Plan for Brooklyn College’s Office of Institutional and Academic Programs (IAP).

IAP, the “college within the college”, is one of the most unique offices on campus, managing an extraordinarily diverse portfolio that impacts and interacts with every area of the College. In addition to offering its own noncredit academic programs, the unit provides a broad range of administrative, operational, and communication services to the campus community; manages the College’s facility at 25 Broadway in lower Manhattan; and supports several standalone academic enterprises.

Planning and assessment are central to orderly and effective administrative operations. The IAP plan, however, endeavors to connect and define all of the unit’s functions and requirements; rather than peripheral to the unit’s work, it is a central, defining feature, linking internally, through staff performance evaluations; upwards, to the missions, goals, and objectives of the Senior Vice President for Finance and Administration; and institutionally, aligning with annual reporting requirements of the Institutional Assessment Committee and the Brooklyn College 2018-2022 Strategic Plan.

Accordingly, the IAP plan is integrated with almost every institutional assessment mechanism, thus supporting and advancing the College’s assessment activities and culture. It is also a mechanism to provide IAP staff with meaningful direction, clearly defined roles and engagement with the goals of IAP and the College, as well as fostering a greater sense of purpose and motivation.

This document was conceived by a working group representing the four primary pillars of IAP: the Graduate Center of Worker Education, Noncredit Academic Programs, Campus Support Services, and IAP Communications. Finding connectivity across an office as complex as IAP initially seemed a daunting task, but the natural synergies and collaborations that emerged from the initial formation of the office helped clarify and define a sense of shared purpose. From these, points of commonality were identified and formed the basis of our Mission Statement. This draft statement as well as its inchoate goals and objectives were shared with the corresponding staff for their thoughts and input. In the development of this plan, central consideration was given to data collection and assessment activities that would help the College provide the necessary evidence to assess its own progress toward goals. Every aspect of this process was guided by the strategic plans of the Office of the Senior Vice-President for Finance and Administration and, most especially, of the College.

Excluded are the Adult Literacy and CUNY EDGE programs. Though part of the IAP portfolio, both units are beholden to outside funders, which, by necessity, establish their own priorities and goals. Nonetheless, points of connectivity are evident (emphases on communications, student support, service, etc.) which indicate a tangential alignment of missions. When these units enter their next planning cycle, a fuller integration with the IAP plan will be considered.

We feel strongly that IAP has the ability to make a positive, transformative impact on the College and the plan that follows is a roadmap to that end.
